

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN HOUSE AND SENATE VERSIONS OF S. J. RES. 1 -

PRESIDENTIAL INABILITY

1. Sections 1 and 2 are identical.
2. On page 2, lines 9 and 10, the Senate version refers to the "President of the Senate", whereas the House version refers to the "President pro tempore of the Senate".
3. On page 2, line 12, after "his office," the House inserted: "and until he transmits a written declaration to the contrary,".

The Senate version contains no such language.
4. On page 2, line 16, of the Senate version, insert a comma after the word "departments".
5. On page 2, line 18, the Senate version refers to the "President of the Senate", whereas the House version refers to the "President pro tempore of the Senate".
6. On page 2, line 23, the Senate provides for a "SEC. 5", whereas the House version merely provides for a new paragraph.
7. On page 2, line 23, the Senate version provides "Whenever", while the House version provides "Thereafter, when".
8. On page 2, lines 23 and 24, the Senate version refers to the "President of the Senate", while the House version refers to the "President pro tempore of the Senate".
9. On page 3, line 3, of the Senate version, insert a comma after the word "departments".
10. On page 3, line 4, the Senate refers to "seven days", whereas the House refers to "two days".
11. On page 3, line 5, the Senate version refers to the "President of the Senate", whereas the House version refers to the "President pro tempore of the Senate".

12. On page 3, lines 8 and 9, after the word "shall" the Senate version has the following language: "immediately proceed to decide the issue.". The House language is: "shall decide the issue, immediately assembling for that purpose if not in session."

13. On page 3, line 9, after the word "Congress", the House version provides: ", within ten days after the receipt of the written declaration of the Vice President and a majority of the principal officers of the executive departments, or such other body as Congress may by law provide,".

The Senate version contains no such provision.